WEDNESDAY MORNING, DEC. 13, 1876,

THE NORTHERN DEMOCRACY.

We regret to see in some of the southern Democratic newspapers expressions of a want of confidence in the northern Democracy. Such papers taunt the northern Democrats with having elected Tilden by giving him a "solid south," and intimate that if the northern Democrats cannot now say them from misrule and the plunder of the carpet-bag robbers, they will look to other sources for relief. This sort of talk is as unjust to the northern Democracy as it is ungenerous and ungrateful. For ten long years, amid calumny, persecution, and even social ostracism, the Democrats of the north have stood by the constitutional rights of the south. Why should they be mistrusted now, in the hour of victory? None but ingrates make these unjust insinuations. If, in this great emergency, the Democrats of the north are not noisy as these fault-finders intimate, they maintain a commendable equinimity, and are proceeding cautiously, holding back their reserves for the last grand assault for constitutional liberty. We ask the desponding and impatient Democrats of the south to read the following extract from the great speech recently delivered by Horatio Seymour, of New York:

The Democratic party is too strong to be violent; it will not torielt the confidence of the people by any display of passion; it can assert itself through the regular channels of political action. Franks may delay the course of justice, may excite passion hurtfal to the progress of our country, but legal and just punishment will surely follow. That party which controls towns, countles and Sintes will control the in Louisians without making the body of our citizens and the world at large feel that it is a corrupt and partisan decision. We cannot have Mexican politics without Mexican disorders. The business men is all civilized countries have been taught by recent

These words come freighted with wisdom, In the hour of need the northern Democrats friends. They did not falter in the dark days of adversity, when they were trampled down hope of success, but still true as the needle to the poles in their sympathy for the wronged and oppressed south; and now, on the eve of have no motive for deserting the cause they have so long and faithfully served. Let the southern Democracy keep cool, and bide their time. The great army of northern Democrats are preparing for the struggle, and when it comes they will be in the front of the buttle as they have been for the past ten
